In 2044, solar storms have killed 99.7 % of the world's population and only 21 million people survive. The ROC Corporation has designed and built robots called Automata Pilgrim 7000 to help to rebuild the world. These robots have two security protocols; they can neither harm humans nor alter themselves or other robots. When police officer Sean Wallace shoots a robot and claims that it was altering itself, ROC insurance agent Jacq Vaucan is placed in charge of the investigation. Soon he believes that there is a "clocksmith" illegally modifying the robots. Jacq wants to live in the coast and asks his boss and friend Robert Bold to transfer him with his pregnant wife Rachel Vaucan to the coast. Robert offers the possibility if Jacq resolves the case. Jacq and Wallace go to a brothel where the modified robot Cleo attends and Wallace shoots its leg, expecting that the owner will lead them to the clocksmith. They meet Duprè but she is not the clocksmith that is modifying the robots. Soon Jacq discovers who is the responsible for modifying the robots but the Powers that Be in ROC believe that Jacq is the one to be blamed. Jacq Vaucan is an insurance agent of ROC robotics corporation who investigates cases of robots violating their primary protocols against altering themselves. What he discovers will have profound consequences for the future of humanity. Sorry to see many people disappointed by the movie for lacking the action and (perhaps) the iRobot type of storyline and ultimate ending, but not every movie has to be about terminators, evil central computers etc. The movie takes on AI the same way District 9 takes on aliens: no knights in shining armor, no worn out shmata re-re-re-used storyline, just a struggle. Also a big difference that instead of AI being either an omnipotent destroyer of life or just an "evil machine" like many movies would like to portray it - a classic foreign body in an otherwise "perfectly human" world, it shows AI as a brand new life form, making its own decisions however weird and unentertaining they might be, and ultimately doing whatever it takes to survive without having the plot turn into (have to say it again just one more time!) a stereotypical battle against humans.

So due to exactly these factors the movie IMHO is a big breath of fresh air. A worthy alternative interpretation of what AI could be and how it could fit into a world that does not exactly wish it welcome. Being a fan of Antonio Banderas, I find many of his movies to be poorly rated. I held off this movie because of that. But let me tell you, this movie is far from poor. It may have some clichés and what not, but you won't realize it. It's very good and very well acted. The music is exceptional. It amazes me that movies like this has a 30% rating on rotten while John Wick 2 which is essentially rehashed of John Wick has a 89%. Do not follow the reviews, watch it for yourself and judge. The performances range wildly from high (Banderas) to low (Birgitte Hjort Sørensen as Jacq's pregnant wife) to you-must-be-kidding (Melanie Griffith as both a scientific genius and a prostitute android).
